Blair

HIS CAREER SINCE 1861—HOSTILITY TO LOYALISTS AND AFFILIATION WITH THE REBELS—HIS ALLEGED AMBITION.

Correspondence Chicago Tribune.
KANSAS CITY, Aug. 1, 1868.

The recent letter from your correspondent at St. Louis giving to the people a pen sketch of Frank P. Blair is from one evidently well posted as to the antecedents and private history of that distinguished apostate to his country's cause. Full and interesting as your correspondent's sketch is as to Blair's political career, it leaves him just at that moment from which his real apostacy to the Union party dated and his downward movement commenced.

Frank Blair in the role of a revolutionist and disorganizer occupies no new position before the people of Missouri. The sentiments of his recent startling letter do not breathe a tithe of the venom, spirit and hatred of the Union party and its cause and candidates evinced by him in this State during the years 1865 and 1866.

Blair's real disaffection dates from the election of Mr. Henderson to the United States Senate. With his usual modesty he demanded the position for himself, but our Legislature did not see the force of his claim, and from that moment he became soured and secretly inimical to the Republican party.

He did not manifest his hostility openly, however, until the spring of 1865, probably hoping that he would yet regain his influence with the Republican party, which he easily foresaw was thenceforth to be the ruling political power in the State.

In this he was disappointed. On his return to St. Louis, after his campaign with Sherman to the sea, it did not take him long to discover that the Hon. Chas. D. Drake, by the fearlessness and ability which he manifested in our Constitutional Convention, whereby an instrument was adopted that not only made treason odious, but confined the political control of our State in loyal men, had gained such a hold upon the affection of the party that he was sure to be the successor, as United States Senator, of the Hon. Gratz Brown in case that gentleman should decline reelection. Enraged upon finding that the "glory of Ichabod had indeed departed," Blair now went over to the enemy, boots and carpet bag.

He returned to the army, and by the exercise of his influence as a "corps commander" undertook to array the Missouri troops against the new Constitution. The true sons of Missouri spurned him with contempt, and at the election gave a nearly unanimous vote in favor of the new instrument.

Blair then returned to Missouri and took the stump against the new Constitution. He denounced its provisions, and openly advised the rebels to resist its requirements in case it should be ratified. His associations from this time forward with rebels and their sympathizers, together with his dissipation, seemed to have banished all sense of shame from his character. In his speeches he insisted that all, whether obnoxious to the oath of loyalty or not, should take it and thus become eligible as voters on the question of adopting the Constitution. Blair's "Pious Perjury" became the rallying cry of the rebel element. At the election his rebel friends made a raid on the ballot boxes, and came near defeating the adoption.

Probably somewhat disgusted with his first campaign against his former friends, he retired to his plantation near Lake Providence, and did not come to the surface again until the campaign of 1866. He then returned to the State brim full of whiskey and wrath. He at once took the stump against the Republican party. He generally spoke with a pitcher of whiskey on the table before him, and his diatribes became more disgraceful as he waxed drunker. The Radicals he pronounced as worse rebels than the returned men of Price's army. These latter he advised to arm and drill, and at Warrensburg, in a speech which he made at that place, he advised armed resistance to the operations of the Registry law, and by his incendiary harangues infused such a renewed spirit of hostility among the rebel element of the State that the meetings where he spoke were uniformly distinguished by the murder of one or two Union men, and disorders became so extensive in some counties that the Governor was compelled to call out the militia to hold the rebels in check.

While Blair was thus active in the denunciation of the Union men he had no smile too serene for those who had just returned from the battles of the South. Warmly he clasped the hands of the wretches who followed Quantrell to the massacre at Lawrence, who were by the side of Bill Anderson on that bloody morning at Centralia, when over one hundred Federal soldiers were murdered in cold blood after they had surrendered, or cheered the demon Todd as he thrust wounded men upon the burning wagons at Baxter's Springs.

Is it any wonder that Blair, by such conduct, at length alarmed Brodhead, Glover and the shrewder managers at St. Louis, who actually took him off the stump before his appointments were half filled?

Blair, disdaining to reject the rule of his own conduct which he suggested to others, resisted to the last. He refused to take the required oath to enable him to vote. On the day of election he presented himself at the polls, from which he went away a rejected voter. Not daring to act upon the suggestion of "shooting," so frequently made by him, he did the next best thing: sued the judges of election for rejecting his vote—learned in due time that the Blair family even could not overawe a Missouri judiciary, and paid the costs of suit as the reward of his folly.

From that hour Blair sunk into comparative obscurity and would probably never have troubled Missouri again had not his new found friends, Forrest and Hampton, galvanized him into life and thrust him once more under the nostrils of the Union party.

The faction supporting Seymour and Blair in this State is worthy of Claib. Jackson's palmiest days. At the head of their electoral ticket stands N. C. Claiborne, an original rebel, pure and undefiled, formerly of this place. He was present and made speeches in 1861 at the erection of secession poles at Kansas City, Independence and Jefferson City, and, by every means in his power, fired the Southern heart. This specimen of Democracy, during the campaign of 1866, flippantly said that he could take the oath of loyalty as he would swallow a cocktail before breakfast, and the sequel proved that this was no empty declaration, for he went before the registering officers with as much nonchalance as a Frenchman would eat a frog. The balance of the Copperhead electoral ticket is mostly of a similar stripe, and it is meet and proper that they should carry the funeral torches which in November next will let fall their dismal light over Blair's political grave. Missouri will repudiate the Republicans and Revolutionists by at least twenty thousand majority.

Yours truly, KAW

A singular story comes from the neighborhood of Corinth, Mississippi. A Mr. Mangrum killed a young man during the war, and a few days since Mr. Mangrum was out deer driving, and while on one of the stands he saw an object approaching him which so alarmed him that he raised his gun and fired at it. The object, which resembled a man covered with a sheet, continued to advance on Mr. Mangrum, when he drew his pistol and emptied all the barrels at the ghost. None of the shots seeming to take effect, he climbed the tree to make his escape. By the time he was a short distance up the tree the white object was standing under him, with its eyes fixed upon him, and he declared it was the spirit of the young man he had killed. Mangrum was startled at the steady gaze that he fainted and fell from the tree. His friends carried him home, the ghost following, and standing before him constantly until he died after two or three days in great agony.

A Camp Warner, Oregon, correspondent of the Sacramento Union says they have three kinds of soirees in that upper country. First, A "Brigazon," where ladies attend and everybody goes home sober. Second, "Walk around," where the gentlemen only attend, flavor their whiskey slightly with water, and get home before daylight. Third, A "Slambore," which is the concentrated essence of soirees; gentlemen have a little gathering, don't flavor their whiskey at all, get stuck up, get uproarious. Over all the ills of life victorious—don't generally try to go home and don't succeed if they try.

The Battle of Belmont—Grant's First Great Success

From "The Life of Ulysses S. Grant," by Charles A. Dana and J. H. Wilson.

On the morning of the 7th of November, 1861, Grant embarked his available force, consisting of five regiments of Infantry, one section of artillery, and two squadrons of cavalry, in all about thirty-one hundred men, and under cover of two gunboats began a demonstration towards Columbus. But having heard during the night that the rebels had been crossing troops from Columbus to Belmont, and fearing for Oglesby's safety (who had been sent toward New Madrid), he at once decided to convert his demonstration into an actual movement against the rebel camps at Belmont. This purpose was favored by the semblance of a landing which he had made the night before on the Kentucky side ten or twelve miles below Cairo. At early dawn on the 7th the transports steamed down the river, and landing at Hunter's Point, just outside the range of the heavy guns at Columbus, the troops were rapidly disembarked and moved by the flank to within two miles of Belmont. Here they halted long enough to form in order of battle and then marched forward to the attack.

The rebel camp had been established in an open field on the bank of the river, its front covered by a wooded slough running through several small lagoons, and further strengthened by a line of abattis. The enemy under Colonel Tappan having been warned by the lookout from Columbus were on the alert and lost no time in disposing themselves to resist Grant's approach. General Pillow, with four regiments of his division, hurriedly crossed the river and took command of the rebels.

The national forces moved forward to the attack as circumstances would permit, covered by a heavy line of skirmishers, meeting with determined opposition at every step. By nine o'clock they were all engaged, except one battalion left to guard the transports and landing. The rebels fought with determination, disputing every foot of the way, and holding to every tree to the last minute, but after four hours' hard fighting, with varying fortunes, Grant's raw volunteers swept everything before them, pushed the rebels beyond the [illegible], burst upon their camp, captured their artillery and equipage, and took many prisoners. During the action the men had behaved like veterans, but in the moment of victory, they forgot what little they had learned of military order. The four hours' hard work through which they had gone had necessarily disorganized them considerably, and instead of forming again and pressing the rebels, who in the meantime had taken cover under the river bank, they began to plunder the rebel encampment and count the fruits of their victory. Many of the field officers, carried away by enthusiasm, and not realizing the dangers of their situation, wasted their time and breath in making speeches. But the rebels, though beaten, were not disheartened. General Polk, overlooking the entire scene from the heights of Columbus, had become thoroughly alarmed for the safety of Pillow, and hurried reinforcements to him as fast as possible. The regiments under Col. Marks reached him first, soon followed by General Cheatham's brigade, thus increasing the rebel force to eleven or twelve regiments—over twice as many as Grant had with him. Pillow lost no time in reorganizing his command or in getting it into suitable position from which to assail Grant in flank and rear. In the meantime the latter, having observed the rebel transports crowded with troops crossing from Columbus and discovered the movements of Pillow, saw that he had nothing left him but to withdraw his forces promptly to the transports. He directed the camps to be burned, and after much hard work, with the aid of the rebel guns at Columbus, he succeeded in rallying his men to their colors. The march in retreat was begun without further delay, but had hardly commenced when the combined rebel force was discovered between them and the transports. One of Grant's officers hurried to him with the information, and in an excited manner exclaimed, "We are surrounded, and all will have to surrender!" "I guess not," said Grant with composure. "If we are surrounded we must cut our way out as we cut our way in."

When the troops discovered that their Chief was determined to fight his way out, all hesitation was at an end. The attack was made with vigor, and resulted as had been expected—in a second defeat of the enemy. The transports were reached in due time, and the command embarked under cover of the gunboats without further loss or confusion.

The loss of the national forces in killed, wounded and missing was 485 men, while that of the rebels reached 632. This was the first battle of any magnitude in that theatre of operations, and is justly claimed by Grant as a substantial and important victory. Officers and men had behaved with great gallantry. Colonels Logan, Lauman, Dougherty, and Fouke led their men with conspicuous bravery throughout the action, while Grant himself exhibited his usual coolness and determination. In the heat of the action his horse was killed under him. After the larger part of his command had reached the transports, he went up again, accompanied by an aid de camp, for the purpose of withdrawing the battalion that had been left to cover the landing, and such small parties as had not yet got in; but had gone only a few rods when he found himself in front of the entire line of the enemy, not sixty paces distant. Being dressed in a soldier's blouse, the rebels took no particular notice of him. He saw that all his stragglers had been picked up or cut off, and therefore turned to ride towards the boat, but as the rebels continued their advance rapidly in the same direction, he was compelled to put his horse to his best speed, and succeeded in reaching the boat just as she was pushing off. The rebels, now under Polk in person, reached the shore a few minutes afterwards and opened a severe musketry fire on the transports, but as they fired low, little or no damage was done. The gunboats replied with canister and grape and drove them back in confusion.

The rebel historians claim this as a great victory, but nothing is more certain than that Grant accomplished his purpose, captured and burnt the rebel camps, took their artillery, and compelled Pillow's command of five regiments to seek safety under cover of the river bank. After the rebel force had been doubled by two additional brigades, and had succeeded in surrounding Grant, the latter again broke the rebel line and forced his way to the transports, inflicting almost twice as much loss upon the enemy as he had received. Oglesby's movement was entirely protected, and the rebels in all that region were thrown upon the defensive, lest their strong places should be wrested from them. The national troops engaged in the battle of Belmont had no doubt whatever that they had gained a substantial victory, and the memory of their deeds gave them a confidence and steadiness in action which transformed them at once into veterans. Neither officers nor men who participated in that battle were ever known to falter in the hour of danger, but wherever hard work was required or hard blows were to be given, a regiment with "Belmont" upon its flags was sure to be found.

Colonel Israel Painter, a well known and prominent Democrat of Westmoreland County, Penn. (John Covode's district), and a former personal friend of Mr. Stanton, relates the following incident in the career of General Grant: "I was sitting in Stanton's office one day after the news came of the battle of Donelson, no one else being present, when Stanton turned to me, holding in his hands Grant's very modest dispatch. 'Read that,' said he. After I had read it he said: 'I have a great mind to send in his name for Major General; what do you think?' 'Besides,' he added, 'I know the little man. I knew him when he was a boy in Ohio, and I know he can be relied upon.'"

H. R. Dunn, of Bloomington, Illinois, has received a letter which reads as follows:

"Your letter of the 16th inst. to Governor Seymour is received. He directs me to answer your interrogatories and say he does not own a United States bond and never did own one, and he never dealt in bonds or banking of any kind. Very respectfully, yours, &c., D. N. Nixon, Jr." And the New York Evening Post says: "During the late war the papers published near Mr. Seymour's residence complained that he exhibited a similar caution in regard to county bonds issued for raising troops and fitting them out."

Fernando Wood announces that he has retired from political life.

Blair on Military Despotism

From the Chicago Tribune.

[illegible] in making a speech at Leavenworth, in which he undertook to denounce General Grant as an aspirant for a military dictatorship. The fact that Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and the leading officers of the army acted with the Republican party he accounted for by charging that in case of a military despotism they expected to be more conspicuous than under any other government.

Andrew Johnson said in one of his many foolish speeches that he had counted himself Dictator, but with this exception we have heard of no proposition for the establishment of a military despotism since the war, until Frank Blair, in order to commend himself to the Confederate members of the New York Convention, insisted that the Democratic President elect should establish one. In that letter Blair wrote:

"There is but one way to restore the government and the constitution, and that is for the [Democratic] President elect to declare the Reconstruction acts null and void, compel the army to undo its usurpations at the South, disperse the carpet-bag State Governments, allow the white people to reorganize their own governments and elect Senators and Representatives. The House of Representatives will contain a majority of Democrats from the North, and they will admit the Representatives elected by the white people of the South, and with the co-operation of the [Democratic] President it will not be difficult to compel the Senate to submit once more to the obligations of the Constitution. * * * We must have a President who will execute the will of the people by trampling into dust the usurpation of Congress known as the Reconstruction acts."

When Breckinridge was a candidate for the Presidency in 1860, the plan of the rebellion, in case of his election, was that he should take possession of the government, call for Southern troops, declare all the acts of Congress objectionable to the South null and void, compel the army to undo all the usurpations of the government and of the States against slavery, expel from the House of Representatives all the Abolitionists and anti-slavery men and all others save those willing to vote as the South demanded, order elections for new members and admit those only who were sound, and with the House co-operating with him and the army, compel the Senate to submit to the reorganization of the Union with slavery made supreme. In that case there was to be no secession by the South, since the South was to be the Union and the North to be forced to choose between submission and secession.

Frank Blair's programme for himself and Seymour, in case of their election, is almost identical with that of Breckinridge in 1860. He proposes that the President shall treat the laws as a nullity and trample them in the dust, that the President, as head of the army, shall overturn the governments of eight States, and by the sword restore the eight rebel Governments which once proclaimed allegiance to the Confederacy and eternal enmity to the Union. And yet, with that letter not thirty days old, and already backed up by two speeches and another letter even more infamous, this blatant demagogue talks about Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and the officers of the army wishing for a military despotism that they may become prominent.

The spirit of the army is decidedly opposed to military rule, and no men in the country will more heartily approve General Meade's recent speech in Georgia on that subject than Grant, Sheridan and Sherman. On the occasion of the inauguration of the civil government of Georgia, General Meade, in the course of his speech, said:

"And in speaking on my own behalf and that of every officer present, I am sure I can say that it is with the greatest satisfaction and pleasure that we yield to the civil authorities that power which under the law it has, until this day, been our duty to exercise. And I know I can go further and say, that in the discharge of the delicate, embarrassing, and often painful duties which we have been called upon to perform under a law which had no reference to our volition, our public or private opinions, that we have been guided by a conscientious desire to do what our judgment dictates to be right, and only to do what we considered right, regardless of personal or political considerations. No one in this [illegible] land is more rejoiced at the restoration of civil authority, no one regrets more the emergency which for a time required it should be subordinate to the military; no one prays more earnestly that it may never again be deemed necessary to place the military paramount to the civil power, than does the humble individual who now addresses you."

These are the sentiments of every soldier in the army. Contrast their pure patriotism with Blair's reiterated threats of civil war and Executive usurpation!

The New York Times reaches the conclusion that the most eloquent among the many millions of orators who inhabit our great spreading republic is General Truman, of Mississippi, late a delegate to the New York Democratic Convention. After having heard and read a vast amount of the most brilliant eloquence of the burning orators who revel in the glorious region of Buncombe, we are forced to confess that we have never known anything quite equal to the address which the General has just published, and whose "eloquence" is praised by that eminent critic the Jackson Clarion. We give a specimen or two. Speaking of the nomination of Horatio Seymour, he says:

The lead and the line were sedulously dropped to the uttermost depths of the great sea of public sentiment—two days of anxious and patient toil were devoted to this searching triangulation of the popular mind—the last drawing of the lead and line of the State of Ohio "plucked up drowned honor by its locks," and presented the name of Horatio Seymour, of New York, as the great man of destiny who was to lead the grand army of constitutional restoration. The whole assembly were electrified as with a halo of joy. Old sea faring Neptune, the silent surveyor of the scene, with her stormy trident and omnipotent power, now seized the convention with the power of a hurricane. President Seymour, like Palinurus, the pilot of the vessel of Æneas, attempted in vain to resist the rolling tide of the teeming millions of America that bore his banner aloft despite of himself. He was carried away by the tempest of universal enthusiasm, and finally yielded to his destiny with all the dignity of a magnanimous hero, like that of our own Gen. Lee to the victorious banners of the Union army.

As Captain Cuttle says, "There are chunks of wisdom for you."

John Banyard, the well known artist, is the author of the following [illegible]:

[illegible] kind Heaven oft we prayed
When foul [illegible] treason ranted
[illegible] came and he our country saved
[illegible] prayer was humbly granted
[illegible] kind Heaven another prayer
[illegible] which our [illegible] has panted

[illegible] and not find a better tribute [illegible] than the following:

I'd rather [illegible] if he be silent and still

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE

MOUTH OF THE UMPQUA, Aug. 23, 1868.

A day on the beach at the mouth of the Umpqua. Thanks to a rascally refractory quadruped of the equine species for this hour of rapture on the lonely shore, and curses upon the wrong headedness peculiar to his Cayuse race, and I feel particularly so, for the trick he played me.

Be it known that the only resident in this vicinity is a bachelor who has established himself in a secluded cove or bay on the south side of the river about a mile above the point where it enters the ocean. As he is the only person living between Gardiner, ten miles distant on the one hand and Empire City, twenty miles distant on the other, his house is a sort of stepping place for travelers between Umpqua and Coos Bay. Horses are kept at his place for hire to those who wish to go to Empire City. The distance is twenty miles, the route is along the ocean beach. Having negotiated for an animal to perform this journey, I mounted, accompanied by the important personage who carries the mails that supply the people along the coast with information regarding the rest of the world. Luck was against us from the start. Between us and the mouth of the river was a sharp point of rocks jutting into the water, around which, in the then state of the tide, we could not pass. It therefore became necessary for us to avoid it by going over a point of land covered with heavy timber and a dense undergrowth. The trail was narrow, crooked, precipitous, and much obstructed by logs and bushes. Dismounting and putting our horses ahead of us, they went on quietly enough till they began to descend to the beach again, when some disarrangement of the saddle of the leading horse caused him to forget his propriety and to commence kicking, rearing and running. His companion imitated his example, and away they went, plunging through the bushes and down the hill, and by the time they reached the beach they had cleared themselves of the encumbrance of saddles, blankets, baggage and mails, and were well stripped for traveling. Two chop-fallen individuals following in the trail and passing article after article of the wreck the runaways had left behind them, emerged from the forest just in time to see them careering down the beach about half a mile distant, evidently determined to see the end of the route before halting.

"Here was a "fix." There was no use to waste words over the situation. No remarks that could have been made would have suited the occasion, the inspiration of genius could not have done the subject justice. My companion in disappointment returned to the "ranch," a mile distant, to get another horse with which to pursue the fugitives, and I like Micawber when in jail for debt, detained by circumstances over which I had no control, had the alternative before me of going back to the "ranch" or of spending the day in curious research and serious meditation on the beach. I chose the latter, and so made a day of it on the shore at the mouth of the Umpqua.

Homeric, Virgilian and Miltonic studies, forgotten for years, now supplied the memory with an abundance of sublime verses about the "hoary deep," and "loud-roaring sea." And who is there, especially among those visiting the ocean but seldom, who does not find himself on such occasions repeating, almost unconsciously, the "rage divine" of those writers, the role of whose verses could have been inspired by nothing less grand and sublime than the boundless ocean itself?

Withdrawn entirely from the world, retired from the association of men, looking for hours upon the billows and listening to the roar of ocean, allowing rude thought to run wild in the field of contemplation and pondering upon questions never in the world to be answered, man loses himself in dreams, of the past, save that brief period which is comprehended in his own little life, he has no experimental knowledge the future, like the solemn, trackless ocean, stretches out unknown before him. He realizes that he is "such stuff as dreams are made of, and his little life is rounded with a sleep." This is all, without God's revelation, man can know no more.

One poet tells us that there is society by the deep sea, where none intrudes, and another explains that they are lost to virtue and to manly thought who think it solitude to be alone. Remarks no doubt justly and correctly made, yet solitude "by the deep sea," at first a pleasing novelty, at last becomes oppressive, and there is no sense of loneliness equal to that which comes at last to be felt in the lonely presence of the ocean. There are times when one must "think it solitude to be alone."

At most places along the coast, from the Columbia river to the Southern boundary of Oregon, there is a wide beach which, when the tide is at a medium stage, affords a good road, smooth as the best McAdam. But occasionally a prominent foreland or high promontory projects into the sea and compels the traveler to make a painful detour by steep ascent over a high spur of mountain. It was a climb of this sort on a small scale, which resulted in the characteristic decampment of our "Cayuses" to-day. Against these rocky precipices, which say to the sea "thus far and no farther," the breakers dash with wild fury, roaring hoarsely in cavernous recesses formed by the tireless action of the waves through unnumbered ages. Along the coast the sands are continually shifting, and large dunes are steadily building up where none existed before. The site of Umpqua City bids fair soon to be covered with a mountain of sand.

Three or four years ago the lighthouse at the mouth of this river was undermined by the steady encroachment of the waves. It fell and its site is undiscoverable. It was built upon a small sand spit, a piece of folly which the Government ought never to tolerate. The buoys which once marked the channel at the entrance of the river are all gone. Some of them were picked up and sent to San Francisco and one an iron buoy of the best manufacture is lying on the beach a short distance above the river's mouth. Some years ago this place was much frequented by pleasure seekers and an Ocean House was built on the beach for their accommodation. It is now fallen down, and the drifting sands have almost covered the ruin. Thus every evidence of the work of man about this spot is being obliterated and on the lone shore loud moans the sea, rolling ceaselessly with none to hear it, as it has rolled since the creation's dawn. And this place is again like the scene of the creation, (like it time, I put it) by Milton—the haunt of seals and [illegible] and sea mews clang.

But evening approaches, our truants have been captured and [illegible] by their thirty miles of [illegible] travel they have now [illegible] unanimously to the service which they deserted in the morning. Almost every Oregonian [illegible] its frequent admonitions not to put his trust in Cayuses. My experience with this one shall serve as a precaution, at least till I am done with him. S.

"The Era of Good Feeling."

We have been often told that the restoration of the Democratic party to power would introduce the era of good feeling, of conciliation and good will toward all men. Everybody was to forget and forgive all injuries, prejudices and unpleasantnesses of every sort, and the lions and lambs were to lie down together. The Herald of this city has been particularly prodigal of promises in this direction, speaking like a duly authorized oracle in behalf of its Southern brethren. It is not, however, altogether clear that the era is any nearer its dawning than before the Democratic party had achieved the local and State successes which have within the last year so revived its hopes and so encouraged the late rebel lions. We have lately published some news matter from the Southern States which casts very decided doubt upon the feasibility of pasturing the lions and lambs upon the same grass plat, especially if upon the Democratic plan, the lambs are to be muzzled while the lions are to have their fangs and claws at will and doubly whetted. The lions seem to have forgotten with remarkable facility that not long since they were at the mercy of an outraged government and that they were only spared through clemency from being treated as criminals and outlaws. The conciliation and toleration for which they whined a few months ago, are quite forgotten now, and put by as something with which a chivalrous Southron has nothing to do. The following extract from the Memphis Appeal will serve to show how the era of good feeling is beginning to dawn, the moment that the late rebels get a belief in the immediate success of the Democracy. Speaking of immigration from the North, it says:

> "Young men, it is for you to bring back to the country these golden days. The South is our land, the North is a foreign and hostile realm. Stand at the altar of your country. Swear eternal hatred of its oppressors. Swear that the day shall come when the Susquehanna and Ohio shall be rivers of fire as they now are rivers of blood, between your native land and that of the Northern Huns, which no man shall attempt to cross and live."

There's chunks of good feeling, conciliation and toleration, for you! This is not by any means an isolated example, but all over the South, the late delegates to the New York Convention, are talking in a strain which, if not so madly violent, is no less proscriptive and intolerant of Northern men and Southern loyalists.

The special correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, writes as follows of the condition of Tennessee:

> Political sea turbulent and squally. Democracy on the rampage and riding a high horse that is to tramp down, swallow up and annihilate every vestige of hated Radicalism. Does one take up a morning paper, it is filled with notices of ward clubs, ward meetings, Democratic rallies, and death and confusion to Radicalism. Upon the street corners, in the eating houses and saloons one hears little else but talk of Democratic meetings, Democratic success and bitter invective towards Radicals in general, coming alike from rebel Generals, Colonels, Majors, high privates and strolling carpet bag editors. * * * In fact, go where you will, you hear little else but bitter invective and denunciations of all who dare avow themselves as Radicals. Talk of freedom and tolerance of opinion in the South! It is all nonsense, and is seldom or never met. In fact it is directly the reverse, and all the pent up hatred so long vented upon Yankees has been turned up on those who differ with them in political opinion and dare to show it.
> At the close of the war little of this was seen. Disheartened with their rebellion, nothing was then heard in Tennessee on the part of returning rebels of political rights. Having fought through a long and terrible war for so-called "Southern rights," and decided the issue with the sword, they expected to abide such decision. Not only disfranchisement but confiscation was looked for as the natural consequence of rebellion and all expected to acquiesce in such decree. Mistaking apparent submission as guarantee for future loyalty, confiscation laws were held in abeyance and the reins of Government rule gradually relaxed. Northern capital and immigration began to pour in, and Tennessee began to rival in rapid growth and prosperity the States of the North and West. The military arm, for which alone the rebel element seemingly have respect, was removed. The same leading spirits who had controlled the powerful enginery of the press, resumed their former occupation and began gradually instilling into the public mind the elements of discord again. Their former political animosities and intense hatred for those who, as Tennesseeans, had been true to the National flag, was insidiously worked upon and turned in vindictive bitterness against the State government, as reorganized from such elements in their midst.

A Boston merchant having written a letter to a prominent business man of Memphis inquiring if a Radical house from there, with plenty of capital would be tolerated, the Ku-klux, to whom the letter was handed replied, in substance, that if the new comer would keep his opinions to himself he might be allowed to remain in peace, otherwise he might find Memphis not a pleasant place in which to stay. The effect of such expressions was, naturally, to keep away Northern immigrants and capital and cause the withdrawal of a great deal of money already invested, to the serious detriment of the material interests of the State.

Such being the fruits of a few Democratic local successes, what might we not reasonably anticipate of evil to result from a National triumph of that party?

A THREAT FROM HEADQUARTERS.—One or two of the Southern States have concluded to choose Presidential Electors by their Legislatures, whereat the Washington Intelligencer threatens that the Democracy will not submit to such "a diabolical conspiracy," and says that if the attempt to so choose electors be carried out, there will be civil war before the 4th of next March. The measure proposed is strictly within the constitutional provision, Article II, Sec. 1, which recites that "Each State shall appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of Electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress." If the Legislature choose to appoint the electors it but exercises a right, given it by the constitution of the United States in the clearest language. It is a mere question of policy whether the right be exercised by the Legislature or be given to the people directly. In the Democratic State of South Carolina, prior to the rebellion Presidential electors were chosen by the Legislature and no Democrat or any other man was ever heard to threaten civil war on that account. It is clear that the Democracy of the South are determined to have some pretext for another rebellion.

Assassination—Leg Broken by a Fall.

STOCKTON, Aug. 24.—Last evening about half past six o'clock, James Murdock, proprietor of the Union Hotel at Woodbridge while in the act of changing some money behind the counter, was shot and killed by a man named John Hawkins.

John Thompson, a teamster, while standing in rather a careless manner on his wagon Saturday evening, in the vicinity of the race track, fell from the wagon and had his leg broken above the knee joint.

FROM THE NORTH

SEATTLE, Aug. 21.—Henry Logan, who on Friday morning received a sentence of seven years imprisonment for killing Martin in Snohomish county, about a month [illegible], made his escape from the jail in this place on Friday night.

Thomas K. Smith, charged with the murder of the mate of the ship Wm. Cox, was taken back to Steilacoom to await the September term of court at Port Townsend.

Charles Bachaus died very suddenly on the 15th inst., on Snohomish river. He retired about 3 o'clock, apparently in good health, and died within a quarter of an hour without a sound or struggle, save one call to a camp mate.

Mr. Coleman and party have returned from their tour to Mount Baker, having reached the summit of that mountain.

The small pox is said to have made its appearance among the Indians on the Puyallup reservation.

AS MIGHT HAVE BEEN EXPECTED.—Last year when A. P. Dudley was stumping California for Haight the Democratic papers spoke of him as the "Hon. Democrat A. P. Dudley," "the old mountain war horse A. P. Dudley," etc. He was literally pasted all over with pet names like a dead wall with play bills. Since Dudley's most recent renunciation of Democracy is something too rotten for him to longer endure, the Democratic papers are plastering over these old labels with the foulest and most vindictive epithets. The Herald announces him thus: "At that time [1862] and till last year Dudley was a ranting, swaggering, bullying, bar-room politician of the ultra Radical school." To show how near the editor of the Herald can come to the truth without hitting it respecting any one of his numerous circle of acquaintances, we publish a few sentences from the report of Dudley's speech at Sacramento, Aug. [illegible]. He says:

"He had been a voter for twenty-eight years, had voted the Democratic ticket at every Presidential election except [illegible], when he voted for Lincoln. He was a Breckinridge elector eight years ago. He [illegible] that four years ago he voted for the patriot Lincoln and the traitor Johnson. Since the war he had gone quietly along voting the Democratic ticket and hoping that the Democratic party would be disposed to do what was right and fair."

The treatment bestowed by Democratic newspapers upon Dudley is only what is visited upon every man who renounces Democracy, no matter how pure his motives, or how spotless his private or official life may have been. Should Vallandigham himself, come out for Grant, the Democratic editors would suddenly discover that he had always been a ranting, swaggering, bullying, bar-room politician and a villain of the deepest dye. Till then he will continue to be the saint that he is now. Such is the Democratic conception of truth, fairness and decency in personal and political associations.

THE COMMANDMENTS.

Torture.—Who would endure the torture arising from Chills and Fever when it can be easily cured?

Who would endure sleepless nights, burning fever and icy chills alternately, when a remedy can be obtained for a trifle?

Who would wander like an uncertain shadow, never knowing what moment they may be prostrated?

Who would be a burden to himself and a burden to his friends, who are worn out in administering to his wants?

Who would live this life of agony when the great alterative and tonic, can be obtained at the nearest village? This long established and justly renowned medicine has never been known to fail [illegible], and none but the foolish and weak would hesitate to procure it at once, and save themselves from intense life-long torture. Prepared after long experience and deep study, it has received the endorsement of the most eminent physicians, as well as all classes from every part of the country. To those who doubt its many virtues, all we can say is: try it, and judge for yourselves.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,

Every day letters pour in upon us testifying to its great efficacy in curing Fever and Ague, Dyspepsia, Languor, Nausea and similar ills.

SHIPPING.—We see by the New York [illegible] of the San Francisco Bulletin that prices for travel [illegible] have been so reduced by the opposing steamship companies, via the Isthmus, that nearly all the freight for the Pacific coast is carried by steamers and that little is left to find its way around Cape Horn. Speaking of the two rival steamship companies and the prospects of the opening of the Nicaragua Transit Route the Bulletin's correspondent says: "But whether the Transit route will be re-opened or not, it is safe to assume that the facilities for the transportation of passengers and freight between New York and San Francisco will never be reduced. Even if the present opposition should be bought off, the old company would be compelled through force of circumstances to keep on the route an amount of tonnage at least equal to that now employed by both lines. But those who are in the ring of the opposition, maintain that the Webb party mean to fight it out on that line. It is a mooted question whether either company is making or losing money. They are both doing an immense business, but at extremely low rates. Freight is now taken at such reduced rates that little is left for the sailing ships via the Cape. This change in the current of freight has long been foreseen and predicted, but it has come rather before it was expected, even by many who are immediately interested. If the present low rates via the Isthmus shall be maintained [illegible] of the Cape lines, it is feared, must sooner or later go to the wall.

It is safe to say that in no period in the history of the California trade was the irregular Cape business so dull as at present. The depression of the times of course has something to do with this state of affairs, but the steamers have more.

There is no perceptible falling off in the number of ships loading but the dispatch is anything but quick."

[illegible] TOWN.—A team left standing on First street yesterday, startled by the fast driving of a gentleman in a carriage, ran about the distance of three blocks, when they were brought [up] without having done much damage, save a general mixing up of the contents of the wagon to which they were attached. The man reported sick with the small pox is said to be convalescent. Harrison street is to be improved by grading and laying sidewalks from Fourth to Fifth street. A little son of C. M. Carter, Esq., is said to be seriously ill at Astoria where the family are on a visit. ..A circulating library has been opened on Washington street. We understand that Mr. Walther, late one of the proprietors of the Oregon Pioneer, will start a new paper in this city about the tenth of next month. A drove of 200 cattle reached this city yesterday on their way to Eastern Oregon. ....Quite a discussion, if not a quarrel, arose between some parties on [illegible] street yesterday morning in reference to the location of the City Hospital for patients suffering with the small pox. [illegible] lawsuits are threatened about the matter. [illegible] is two dollars and a half per amount. The Jennie Clark when discharged, will be dispatched for Victoria. In fact.. ..The bathing by boys in the river fronting the city still continues—often to the disgust of persons passing. ..The overland stage arrives usually about 5 P. M. daily.. ..The Recorder's Court room has been refitted and fixed up in good style. Twenty five tons of hay were brought to town during last week. New wheat and oats are coming in, but in limited quantities. Large arrivals of flour are noticed in our Willamette freight lists. The health of the city seems somewhat improved for four or five days past. One or more Chinamen of the last importation die almost every day.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—About twelve o'clock last night the meat packing house of Capt. A. P. Ankeny on the levee, between Ash and Vine streets was discovered by Mr. Hellenbrand, proprietor of the Franklin House, adjoining, to be on fire. At the time the fire was first seen by Mr. H. the flames were bursting through the roof and had there been help on hand the loss of Captain Ankeny's building could not have been prevented, so much headway had the fire made before it was discovered. The [illegible] already communicated to the Franklin Hotel, and Mr. Hellenbrand aroused the inmates of his house, many of whom had barely time to escape. Some [illegible] from the burning building in their night robes while others came out partially dressed carrying their clothes in their hands. The bells were ringing, and in a few minutes the several engines of the department were on the spot and did an effectual work in a short time. However, before it was possible to get the water on the burning mass, the packing house, named above, the Franklin Hotel and an empty building on the north side of the one in which the fire originated, were so far [illegible] that nothing could save them. Yet excellent [illegible] was done by the Fire department to pre[illegible] of the destroying element. By great [illegible] the Bag and Tent Factory was saved. The heat was [illegible], and at times it seemed impossible to prevent [illegible] buildings from catching. As we write ([illegible] A. M.), the flames are almost entirely [illegible]. It is impossible to give the amount of loss. We learn that there was in the building of Capt. Ankeny about 7,000 pounds of choice bacon and hams, partially [illegible]. The buildings were not insured. [illegible] losers are Capt. Ankeny and Mr. Hellenbrand. As to the origin of the fire [illegible] can be obtained at this hour, we learn, however, that no fire has been used in [illegible] where the fire started, for several weeks past. We will ascertain any further facts which may be [illegible], and lay them before our readers tomorrow [illegible].

THE PUBLIC [illegible].—During the vacation in the public [illegible], this [illegible] considerable improvements have [illegible] upon the grounds and buildings belonging to the [illegible]. The [illegible] walk has been laid around the block on which stands the North Portland school [illegible] new fences and comforts added which [illegible] is good, if not better than any school building in the city. The Central building has been greatly improved in [illegible] by the addition of a fine coat of paint. In the southern portion of the district, near the [illegible] of Mr. Stephens, a new school house has been [illegible] dimensions to accommodate the [illegible] to it. School will be opened in this [illegible] on the 7th proximo. We learn that the public [illegible] in the three buildings in the city will be opened next [illegible]. Some time since we were informed that [illegible] Johnson and Warren had been [illegible] by the Directors to teach in the city schools but [illegible] in addition to these have also been engaged we have not heard of it.

[illegible] LEATHER.—Mr. A. H. Zehnizer is one of the men who are serving Oregon to some purpose, by [illegible] home made article of prime necessity. He [illegible] several years engaged in the manufacture of [illegible], from harness to the finest calf, and [illegible] to supply the demand in this section of the [illegible], as well as having exported more or less. His [illegible] is about three miles south of [illegible]. He has an extensive tannery, filled up with the [illegible] improvements and appliances for [illegible] all the qualities of leather that can be possibly [illegible]. We have in our office a fine, heavy calfskin, [illegible] out from his tannery, which competent [illegible] equal to any of Eastern make. Mr. [illegible] is prepared to fill orders promptly and in every [illegible] of the trade.

[illegible].—In an item about the sick Chinaman, which we published last week, we said, "If the [illegible] has the smallpox we have not been able to [illegible] any reliable physician. We have not heard [illegible] one has examined the case but Dr. Ellis, whose [illegible] we gave the other day." Our readers will remember Dr. Ellis' opinion, which we gave, was that the [illegible] had not the small pox. We aimed nothing [illegible] Dr. Ellis' reputation as a physician, or his skill, and our item, simply stated and fairly construed means [illegible] more than that no reliable physician had pr[illegible] the case in question, one of small pox. We say [illegible] to ourselves and to correct any mis[illegible] which may have been placed upon the item [illegible].

"[illegible] EXCURSION."—On next Thursday evening [illegible] Lodge of Good Templars will give a grand [illegible]. The steamer Senator has been [illegible], a band of music secured and everything ar[illegible] the pleasure of those who attend. The boat [illegible] the Morrison street wharf at the hour named in the advertisement, and proceed to Oregon City, where [illegible] and band will be at the disposal of guests [illegible] of the order until time to return. Refreshments such as [illegible] them will be furnished on the boat.

A PLEASANT VOYAGE.—Those desirous of making a very [illegible] trip to [illegible], by a pleasant route, should be prepared [illegible] on the George S. Wright, upon her next trip from Portland. We learn that she will sail from this port on or about September the first and will go by the way of Olympia and other points on Puget Sound. To parties [illegible] to spend a week [illegible] the Sound [illegible] a [illegible] healthful and delightful trip, [illegible] could be presented.

[illegible].—According to Bulwer's "Last Days of [illegible]" a certain officer was stationed in the amphitheatre, whose duties were to stand up and proclaim [illegible] the moment when the combatants were to be let in, and to make similar proclamation when the death or killing of one had ended the conflict and when the carcass was to be dragged out. The officer was called "the editor." Hence the word.

CARGO OF THE "WRIGHT."—The following comprises the cargo of the Wright, which sailed for Victoria yesterday [illegible] at 7 o'clock: 60 gunnies wheat, 81 gunnies oats, 2,000 qr sks flour, 4 gunnies bacon and 150 sheep. The circus troupe also went over with the Wright, taking with them four horses, the canvass and all necessary [illegible] for giving a good performance.

[illegible]—wishing to purchase hardware, iron, steel, [illegible] and carpenters' tools have an excellent opportunity to supply themselves at exceedingly low rates, at the house of Messrs. Underhill & Co., who are disposing of their large stock very low in order to close out.

RETURNED.—Several citizens of Portland who have been on a visit to Victoria, returned on the Active yesterday. Among them, were Capt. Flanders and Col. McCraken, with their families. All seemed to have enjoyed the trip very well.

THE SOIREE TO-NIGHT.—Remember that to night, at the Oro Fino Hall, the pupils of Professor McCann tender him a complimentary Soiree. A very pleasant time is anticipated. A ticket will be necessary to gain admission.

MUSIC.—Yesterday evening as the steamer George S. Wright steamed out in the river, the band belonging to [illegible] Circus was on board and favored the large crowd of people on shore with some stirring patriotic airs.

SALE POSTPONED.—By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that the auction sale of the estate of J. B. Wallace, a bankrupt, fixed for to day has been postponed until Thursday next at 10 A. M.

FOR VICTORIA.—The steamship Active will sail for Victoria on Thursday the 27th at [illegible] P. M.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Huntington of the Salem [illegible] made us a brief call yesterday evening.

C. BRAUNS.—There is a message for you at the telegraph office in this city.

WILLAMETTE FREIGHTS.—The Senator from Oregon City yesterday brought the following: [illegible] 27 boxes eggs, 18 sks bacon, 10 bxs apples, 1 bale wool [illegible].

DUE.—The steamer John L. Stephens, which sailed from San Francisco for this port on last Friday at 2 P. M., had not arrived up to the time of going to press.

MEMBERS of the Athletic Base Ball Club are requested to meet on the grounds for practice this afternoon without fail. By order of the Captain.

COMING HOME.—Hon. Geo. H. Williams and wife left New York for Oregon on the 15th. They may be expected here in two weeks.

THANKS.—We are again indebted to [illegible] the gentlemanly purser of the steamer Active for late files of Victoria papers.

N. W. Spaulding of San Francisco, the Patentee of the well known Spaulding's Patent Inserted Tooth Circular Saws, has brought suit in the U. S. Circuit Court of San Francisco before Judge Field against Wm. J. Tucker, agent for the American Saw Co., for infringement of his patent. Alleged damages $5,000. Contingent not exceeding three times the actual damage.

FURNISHED ROOMS with Board for gentleman and wife at Mrs. Wright's 203 Second Street.

EXTINGUISHER
SELF-ACTING FIRE ENGINE!

THIS INVENTION HAS FOR ITS OBJECT THE extinguishing of Fires in a more instantaneous manner than has hitherto been achieved.

The advantages to be derived from the use of the EXTINGUISHER are as follows:

Every fire begins in a small way and its rapid and uncontrollable increase is owing to the fact that at the time of its commencement (when every moment's delay in checking it is of the utmost importance) no means are ready at hand.

The EXTINGUISHER is the only Engine that fills this requirement.

It is always ready for use, though standing unused for years.

It puts out Fire instantly.

It saves the great deluge of water now used for this purpose.

It is as effective in the hands of a Boy as the most experienced Fireman.

It is portable and as easily handled as a bucket of water.

It possesses within itself the power of a force pump, and as effective as a Steam Engine.

It is the only known invention that will put out Fires from Kerosene, Tar, Naphthaline, and combustible materials now in common use.

PRICE—No. 1 $40, No. 2 $50, No. 3, $60.

G. VENARD.
CHARTRES COFFEE!
Manufactory Established in June, 1851.
STEAM POWER, NOS. 683 AND 681 FRONT ST.

HAS CONSTANTLY ON HAND GROUND AND ROASTED COFFEE, GREEN COFFEE of the best qualities. CREAM OF TARTAR and SPICES of all sorts.

The undersigned, who has always enjoyed public confidence for the excellent quality of his Coffee, neglects nothing to justify the good name acquired by his productions, the sale of which daily increases. The acknowledged superiority of his merchandise, which commands here and in the markets of the interior a relatively higher price, excites the cupidity of some manufacturers and every day he sees increasing the number of those who, by counterfeit or imitation of his trade mark, seek to deceive the public, palming upon them their inferior productions for the genuine G. VENARD CHARTRES COFFEE. This fraud can deceive nobody after a trial but only adds to the favorable opinion of the consumers, the very flattering though unwilling testimony of the counterfeiters. Nevertheless, buyers should be forewarned and placed on their guard against this practice.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.

Thrilling Adventure with a Rattlesnake

[illegible] Mr Richard Ben[illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] Dubuque [illegible] the themes [illegible]

How long he lay thus he knew not [illegible] but he was [illegible] awakened by a peculiar rustling noise [illegible] Instinctively he turned his head [illegible] the point from whence the sound proceeded when he beheld a sight which [illegible] will not be apt to forget until his dying day. There not four feet from him coiled up as if ready for a spring, with head erect, ever darting fire and tongue playing the forked lightning, from the [illegible] was an enormous rattlesnake over eight feet in length. It would be hard to describe the feelings of Bennett at that moment. Fresh and vigorous in the springtime of life, the world with its dazzling future before him, hardly a stone's throw from his father's house, death, in its most terrible form, had apparently come upon him. His presence of mind did not desert him, however, and he lay perfectly motionless, fixing his eyes upon those of his snakeship and waiting for new developments.

This appeared to suit the latter. Gradually he relaxed his menacing attitude, and lowering his head, commenced to crawl slowly toward Bennett, at the same time emitting a low murmuring, singing sound, which the impromptu hearer describes as having been really delightful. Nearer and nearer came the snake, Bennett remaining perfectly motionless, not daring to move for fear of the terrible fangs, until finally the monster actually crawled over his legs and nestled down by his side like a pet kitten, as much as to say that he was well pleased with his new companion and would forego hostilities. Here was a dilemma, and how to get out of it was the difficulty. While Bennett was speculating as to how this could be done and revolving over a thousand plans, a neighbor chanced to pass along, who comprehended the whole situation at a glance, and at a mute gesture from Bennett, rushed to the house for assistance.

He procured a rifle, and coming back, put the muzzle within two feet of the head of the serpent, and with a steady aim pulled the trigger. There was a deafening report, and the next instant the snake was writhing in his death agony, while Bennett bounded from the ground and with the joyous exclamation "Saved! saved!" fell fainting in the arms of his preserver.

We are aware that there are a few features connected with this snake story somewhat remarkable, but we received the same from reliable authority, and are not disposed to question its veracity. The snake, doubtless, had his den in the rocks near Bennett, and seeing an intruder resolved to cultivate a closer acquaintance. The skin was taken from the monster, and is now hanging as a trophy where it can be witnessed by all the curious. But it is safe to say that Bennett will read Tennyson beneath the shadows of those rocks no more.

Pacific Coast Appropriations.—The Washington correspondent of the Bulletin furnishes the following list of appropriations passed at the late session of Congress, for the Pacific coast:

In addition to the regular fixed appropriations for salaries of public officers, etc, the following sums have been appropriated: For the Western Coast Survey, $130,000; erection of a Lighthouse at Point Ano Nuevo (Pigeon Point) $90,000; a new lighthouse tender for the Pacific coast, $90,000; the construction of a Custom house at Portland, O., $50 000; completion of the branch mint at Carson City, $150 000; compilation of Mining Statistics, $4,300; preservation of the Benicia Arsenal, $10 000; surveying the public lands of California, $50,000; surveying the public lands of Oregon $40,000; surveying the public lands in Washington Territory $15 000; surveying public lands in New Mexico, Montana and Utah, $45,000; surveying public lands in Arizona and Nevada, $15 000. The amounts appropriated for wages, etc, at the San Francisco Mint and Mare Island Navy Yard are $195 000 and $60,000 respectively. The cost of the Territorial Governments of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Washington, is $136 000, being about $35,000 each. The appropriations for the Indian service on the Pacific slope (exclusive of the pay of superintendents and agents) amount to over $800,000, of which amount more than one half is to be expended in New Mexico. The appropriations for postal facilities to distant points are: for the Overland Mail, $900,000; for the China Mail service, $500,000; Sandwich Island Mail service $75 000; for Telegraphing, $80 000 (including $40 000 deficiency from last year).

Exclusive of the three last items of the appropriations for Indians, and those for the payment of fixed salaries and expenses, the civil appropriations for the Pacific coast amount to about $1 000,000. Including army and other expenditures, the [illegible] would be about $4,500,000.

The grand jury of the Quarter Sessions, in Philadelphia, have presented Girard Park in that city, as a place of resort for thieves, lewd women and lawless persons generally. The utmost disorder and disregard for the laws prevail there, and respectable people never go there for recreation on that account. Fights of the most desperate character are common, drunkenness is universal, and the thief, deeming it below his dignity to rob surreptitiously, boldly removes watches and valuables from his victim, delivers them to an associate, and is ready for further proceedings. Yet it is declared, with all these facts notorious, the district Attorney would hardly be able to procure punishment of the offenders frequenting the place.

At one time Dr Wayland was lecturing on the weight of evidence furnished by human testimony. He was illustrating its authority and sufficiency even for the establishment of miracles. A member of the class, not entirely satisfied with the correctness of the teaching, suggested a practical application of the doctrine. "What would you say, Dr Wayland, if I stated that I was coming up College street I saw the lamp post on the corner dance?" "I should ask you where you had been, my son," was the quiet reply, in the instructor's gravest manner.

A train of twenty-three wagons of Josephite families, on their way from Utah to the States, has arrived at Cheyenne. They express themselves very much disgusted with the way that they were treated by Brigham. They assert that the portion of those who acknowledge Brigham are not true Mormons, but Brighamites, and that he is not a true prophet or the legitimate successor of the head of the church, but an impostor who in the name of the church makes arbitrary laws for his own personal advancement and gain. They left Utah on the 22d of May, and lost no stock and had no difficulty with the Indians.

The Mineral Point (Wis) Democrat says the streets of that town are deserted and the cry is still "Men wanted!" The extreme heat ripened the wheat so quickly that even with all the improved machinery the farmers were unable to keep up. The yield of wheat to the acre is above the average, the head is large and full and the berry plump. The oat crop is very promising, and corn never grew faster [illegible] and is so far advanced that but little fear is apprehended from early frosts.

The Ohio State Journal says: Positively no more puns will be allowed in this paper on the name of Seymour. We are not in condition to see more of them. Any one quoting "There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio," shall be dealt with in a miscellaneous manner. Any one [illegible] who this C Moore is shall be [illegible] by our English contributor. Any one inquiring where the Democracy [illegible] shall be smelted. We don't [illegible] seem over fastidious in this matter, but contributors are warned to desist.

Some caricaturist of the Nast school should get up a picture representing Seymour with one hand [illegible] addressing the Democratic Convention and declaring that he could not, without dishonor, accept its nomination, while with the other hand behind his back he is taking the nomination from [illegible] and Vallandigham.
